Security Development Seminar: Hostile Surveillance and Surveillance Detection

Lessons and Guidelines for Corporate Security Managers

Monday 19th July, 2010

New Date Added: Thursday, 22nd July 2010

Supported by London First

The Need

For any attack, from the most simple to the most sophisticated, Hostile Surveillance is the earliest stage at which the professional security operator is likely to become aware of a potential hostile intent. Whether it is by terrorist or criminal groups, or single-purpose activists committed to disrupting AGM's, making anti-globalisation protests or simply obtaining high-profile media coverage, the ability to conduct hostile surveillance without fear of being spotted or diverted is one of the major considerations in Target Selection.

In the present world, every major organisation should consider Surveillance Awareness and Surveillance Detection as being a vital component of its security operations, a function of the job description of every person from the Group Director to the front-line security personnel.

The Course

This 1-day seminar will introduce all of the main components of Hostile Surveillance, and will allow security managers to understand how HS is conducted, ways in which it can be detected, and effective prevention and deflection strategies.

All material is covered in a structured and realistic manner, and is designed to allow participants to gain the greatest amount of information that will be of immediate use to them in their working environment.

Course Material

- Principles of Surveillance Detection
- Hostile Surveillance in the Planning Cycle
- Best Practices From Around the World
- Suspicious Indicators – People & Vehicles
- Protective Strategies
- Overt vs Covert Detection Strategies
- Implementation and Management of Corporate SD
- Self-Auditing – Identifying Weaknesses

Trainers

Ivor Terret, CEO Multi Tier Solutions Ltd, is currently based in Israel, where he was a founding member, team leader and instructor of a government Surveillance Detection Unit specializing in all areas of Surveillance Detection and Protective Surveillance, including projects involving Heads of States and Critical Security Infrastructure. Ivor's company, Multi Tier Solutions, is the leading Israeli private sector training company for all matters concerning surveillance and defence-against-surveillance programmes.

David Rubens, MD Meido Consultants, holds an MSc in Security and Risk Management, writing his dissertation on counter-terror security strategies for large-scale organisations. He is currently a visiting lecturer on the MSc Global Security and Policing programme at both Leicester University, and is a Visiting Fellow in the Security and Resilience Department at Cranfield University at UK Defence Academy. He has lectured internationally on all aspects of large-scale corporate security management, as well as having many years of practical experience in front-line security activities.
